The cultural institution "Mogilev Regional Art Museum named after P.V. Maslenikov" is located in the center of the city of Mogilev. The building of the museum is an architectural monument of the early twentieth century. It was designed by the architect A.V.Drucker and was intended for the land-peasant bank.

In 1917, the building housed the publishing house of the Revolutionary Headquarters newspaper.

Since May 1919, the Mogilev State Historical Museum has been located here. Its attraction was an armored safe room, which kept museum relics. Among the values were the Cross of Euphrosyne of Polotsk in 1161, made by Lazar Bogsha, a collection of Belarusian manuscript books and letters (175 units), weapons of the X–XIV centuries (280 units), coins (1800 units), icons of the XVII–XIX centuries, the mace of Sigismund III, paintings by I.Aivazovsky, I.Repin, V.Serov and other famous artists, the miter of the Mogilev Archbishop GeorgyKonissky, the shroud of 1566 by a close relative of Ivan the Terrible's wife Anastasia Romanovna – Anna Fyodorovna Paletskaya, the first printed Minea, royal letters of the XVI–XVIII centuries (26 units), handwritten irmos of 1697 with drawings and much more.

Their fate remained unknown due to the outbreak of the Great Patriotic War, when the exhibits were taken outside Mogilev.

In 1944, after the liberation of the city, the building housed the regional committee and city committee of the party, later the editorial office of the newspaper "Mogilevskaya Pravda".

An original and interesting monument of monumental painting of the middle of the 18th century is the wall paintings of the staircase of the Belynichy Monastery of the Carmelites, in the urban village of Belynichi, on which the monk Joseph worked with two assistants Shultz and Prozar.

In 1978, due to the emergency situation of the building, the remains of the monastery were to be blown up. The frescoes were removed and sent to Minsk for conservative work.

Today it is a unique and only monument in the post-Soviet space. To date, the frescoes "Transfiguration" and "Carrying the Cross" are presented in the "Preserved Heritage" exposition and in the branch of the museum.

14. Many feel like outcasts of society, flawed people, infringed on their rights.
